Although the Internet is one of man's greatest creations, it also has many disadvantages, several of which are mentioned below.

Firstly, some people misuse the Internet and perform illegal and harmful actions through the use of the technology. Criminals also use the medium for their evil doings. Another thing that has increased over the years is cyberbullying.

Secondly, with access to billions of computers, computer hackers and dangerous users can hack accounts and steal personal information.

It's great that the Internet can help to reach a much wider audience than traditional advertising methods (e.g., newspaper, TV, and radio). However, because digital advertisements can be sent on a massive scale, you might see more spam in your inbox than junk mail in real life.

Besides, in our digital age, there is an endless amount of content on the Internet. While there are amazing resources, such as Wikipedia, some harmful content also exists. As a result, users can suddenly come across violent or bag images that they may not want to view.

Another disadvantage is that surfing and playing games on the Internet can quickly become very addictive. Doing so can lead to spending a lot of time on the Internet, instead of doing something useful.

Social networking sites can also lead to depression as many people tend to compare their lives with others. You may also find yourself disconnecting from people in your real life.

A major disadvantage of the internet is using the internet for a long period and sticking to computer screens for hours as it causes health problems, for example a loss of eyesight.And spending too much time on the computer surfing the Internet or playing games can also lead to overweight and an unhealthy lifestyle.

Furthermore, the Internet lets students to cheat on their studies, or find others on the Internet to do their homework.

Remember that everything has both best and worst sides, it is us who choose which side to go. So choose wisely and make the internet your good tool.
